

Mindoro State University

College of Computer

ERP and Virtualization: A Look at Third-Party Products

JULY 25, 2025

1:00 PM – 4:00 PM

via MS Teams

ONLINE CCS LEARNING MATERIALS WORKSHOP

College of Computer
Studies

Introduction to ERP

What is ERP?

Introduction to ERP

Enterprise Resource Planning is a business management software that integrates all facets of an operation into one comprehensive system.

It centralizes data and processes for functions like finance, manufacturing, supply chain, and human resources.

Core Purpose: To improve efficiency, streamline processes, and provide a single source of truth for the organization.

College of Computer
Studies

Understanding Virtualization

What is Virtualization?

Understanding Virtualization

Virtualization is technology that creates a virtual version of a physical resource, such as a server, storage device, or network.

It allows multiple virtual machines (VMs) to run on a single physical server, each with its own operating system and applications.

Key Concept: A hypervisor is a layer of software that manages the allocation of physical resources to the virtual machines.

College of Computer
Studies

ERP and Virtualization: The Connection

Why Virtualize ERP?

ERP and Virtualization: The Connection

Enhanced Hardware Utilization: Run multiple ERP environments (e.g., production, testing, development) on one server.

Lower Total Cost of Ownership (TCO): Reduces hardware costs, power consumption, and physical space requirements.

Increased Agility: Faster deployment of new ERP systems and easier scaling of resources up or down as needed.

Improved Disaster Recovery: Virtualization simplifies backing up and restoring the entire ERP environment.

Deployment Models:

On-Premise (virtualized on your own servers)

Cloud-Based (SaaS ERP running on a third-party's virtualized infrastructure)

Third-Party Products: What Are They?

- Definition:
- Software applications developed by independent software vendors (ISVs) to add functionality to a core ERP system.
- They are designed to address specific industry or business needs that are not covered by the generic ERP platform.

Third-Party Products: Why Are They Needed?

- ❑ Functionality Gaps: Fills in missing features (e.g., advanced analytics, specialized accounting, or CRM).
- ❑ Customization: Provides tailored solutions without the need for extensive, costly custom development within the ERP system.
- ❑ Competitive Advantage: Adds unique features that can enhance business performance and offer a notable edge in the market.

Examples of Third-Party Products

- ❑ Customer Relationship Management (CRM): Integrates customer data and sales processes with ERP financials.
- ❑ E-Commerce Platforms: Connects online sales with ERP's inventory and order management.
- ❑ Accounts Payable (AP) Automation: Automates invoice processing and vendor payments.
- ❑ Business Intelligence (BI) Tools: Provides advanced reporting and data visualization capabilities.

Impacts of Integration with ERP:

- ❑ Streamlined Operations: Eliminates manual data entry and reduces the risk of errors by enabling real-time data flow between systems.
- ❑ Improved Data Accuracy: Ensures that all departments are working with the same, consistent, and up-to-date information.
- ❑ Increased Productivity: Automating repetitive tasks frees up employees to focus on more strategic, value-added activities.
- ❑ Enhanced Decision-Making: Provides a more complete, unified view of the business, leading to more informed and agile decisions.
- ❑ Scalability and Flexibility: Allows the ERP system to grow and adapt to new business needs by easily adding new functionalities.

Conclusion

- Synergy in Action: The combination of ERP, virtualization, and third-party products creates a powerful and flexible IT infrastructure.
- Strategic Advantage: By leveraging these technologies, businesses can improve efficiency, reduce costs, and gain a competitive edge.
- Key Takeaway: A well-planned integration strategy is crucial to maximize benefits and mitigate potential risks.

College of Computer
Studies

□ Thank you!